The letter 'A' or aleph (also written 'aleph') was the first letter of the Phoenician alphabet, representing a glottal stop. The name aleph is derived from the West Semitic word for "ox". The shape of the letter A derives from a Proto-Sinaitic glyph that may have been based on a Egyptian hieroglyph, styled as a triangular head with two horns extended. Source: Wikipedia

The capital letter B derives from the Phoenician letter bêt meaning “house”. The lower case b derives from the Egyptian hieroglyph for the consonant /b/ which was an image of a foot and calf. Source: Wikipedia
